More Red Herrings

IT is probably more than a mere coincidence that the recent recommendations of a group of UBC professors on power development in British Colum-bia should be somewhat similar to the Liberal Party's policy on this controversial subject.

An initial assumption might be that the UBC group did its study on behalf of the Liberal Party, but this has been denied by a spokesman for the Professor C. B. Bourne, in a recent television interview, said the study was strictly non-political, and he expressed the opinion that Ray Perrault, the B.C. Liberal leader, may have had access to the that "he may have used it to formulate the Liberal

The main similarity between the Liberals and the professors is in the attitude to the present Columbia River Treaty. Both think that this should be re-negotiated to give Canada a better deal.

The professors take the line that the treaty would be all right if it included provision only for the relatively low-cost dams at Arrow and Duncan Lakes. With the downstream and flood control benefits attached, these projects would give British Columbia limited power at about two mills-the cheapest available from any provincial source.

Mica dam on the other hand, unless it was fully developed for on-site generation—not at present considered as feasible by the B.C. government -would be extremely costly power; over nine mills, bringing the average cost of Columbia power to British Columbia over four mills-or just a little less than the estimates for the Peace.

Where the professors and the Liberals vary is that the former advocate a new look at the Fraser River, which they describe as the truly low cost big block of power still available.

For the Liberals, however, the Fraser is too much of a hot-potato to include in their platform. Politically the Fraser was written off as a power source a few years ago because of potential damage

The UBC group is 'ess timid, and one of its members, Professor J. F. Muir, believes that as a result of recent fisheries research in the U.S., it would now be possible to allow spawning fish to get up the river past the high wall of the Mica dam, and the fingerlings to return to the sea undamaged.

Despite this, the re-introduction of the Fraser at this stage, along with the proposal to re-negotiate the Columbia Treaty appears to be no more than two extra red-herrings to confuse the over-all power picture and to delay action of any kind.

An important point is that within 25 years British Columbia is going to need power both from the Peace and the Columbia, and later from the Fraser too. Thus the aim should be to ensure that the long-term economics are sound rather than to attempt to gear the policy to a program that will give a small initial block of power at a short-term

Dispelling the Cloud

THE cloud lingering around the head of American U-2 pilot Francis Powers ever since his plane was brought down over Russia and his subsequent trial by Soviet authorities, has been lifted. He has been pronounced not guilty of any wrongdoing or dereliction of duty.

The surprising thing is that the Central Intelligence Agency which has cleared him after extensive investigation should not have dispelled some of in Soviet hands. What the agency says now might well have been said then, at least in part.

There was an assumption in some U.S. circles that by not committing suicide and by his frankness at his Moscow trial he had let his country down, instead of choosing to die in a heroic gesture while keeping silent about his plane's mission. It turns out now that he was simply following orders.

Contrary to a general opinion which was allowed to grow against him, he was not supposed to use the poison needle he carried unless he was subjected to torture or other condition which made suicide expedient. Nor was he enjoined to hide the details of his reconnaissance mission. The pilots engaged in these operations were told to admit the truth about their activities if brought down, and to reveal their identity and their employer, excepting only details of the aircraft they flew.

The CIA is satisfied also that Powers had no chance to destroy his plane after it was disabled

The agency cites him in fact as one of the outstanding pilots of the whole U-2 program and concludes that he lived up to the terms of his employmen: and "in his obligation as an American under the circumstances in which he found himself.

That should remove any doubts as to his behavior in a severe and crucial situation while at the mercy of his captors. In surrendering without resistance and adopting a co-operative attitude he was simply following instructions. The back pay to be paid him validates his record.

The strange aspect is that so much of this should have been kept secret while the cloud gathered round his head

At a meeting of meat producers on Saturday, Dr. Kidd, the provincial livestock commissioner, told the assembly that in the near future, the Health of Animals Act would have to be imposed, and provincial inspection regulations brought up to federal standards, whereby all meat bought and sold in the province, would have to be inspected.

This in itself is a very good thing, but for the fact that an abbatoir built to federal standards costs at federal standards coats at least $50,000 for poultry, and $125,000 for red meat, and must employ 15 employees to be eligible for an inspector. Snowball Scare Kills Ex-City Tea-Taster

VANCOUVER (CP)—Police said Wednesday they believe a snowball triggered the death of 75-year-old pensioner Arthur V. Snider in his west end apartment. Officers said the man, a chronic heart condition sufferer, apparently collapsed and died Tuesday after being frightened by a snowball which a group of youth threw against his window. Snider had been a tea-taster for 20 years and formerly lived in Victoria.

Hope you have your shaker of salt handy, for today we're on the subject of "salty" tips. You know that old saying—a watched pot never boils, but did you know when salt is added to the water in the bottom of a double boller, it hastens the boiling point and speeds the cooking of the pudding or sauce or whatever is being prepared, and strangely enough, food will cool more quickly if the container is placed in a pan of cold water to which a liberal quantity of salt has been added.

Speed is also the reason behind two other modern-day salt hints, Frozen meat thaws faster if sprinkled with salt when it is removed from the freeze; and the combination of ice and salt which is used to freeze ice cream, cool a pailful of bottle drinks faster than the refrigerator, so if you need cool drinks for a crowd put them in a pail with crushed ice and salt.

Garden Notes Something for Holes

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRHS

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRMS

In yesterday's column we were discussing the aeration of the lawn—poking holes in the sod, either with a proper aerating implement or with a common digging fork—and for mymoney, there is no one single operation that confers such a dramatic improvement in a run-down and unthrifty lawn.

Even where the soil is fairly sandy and not inclined to pack down, the grass roots themselves will eventually form a "thatch" just under the soil, almost as impermeable to moisture as the thatched roof of an English cottage. Punching holes in the sod allows water to penetrate freely to the lower roots, and permits the life-giving air to enter the soil.

Trouble is, it doesn't take very long for these holes to silt up under the weathering influence of sun, rain and wind, then the job has to be done all over again. It is a big advantage if we could fill up these holes with some material, congenial to grass roots, which would allow air and water to enter freely. Fortunately, there are quite a few dress-ings which come up to these specifi-

Probably the best of the lot, and good on any kind of soil, is perlite, a granular white material which I understand is made from some kind of volcanic rock. Running it a close second is vermiculite—grains of mica expanded by steam treatment into puffy little granules. * * *

These conditioners are a bit too expensive for the treatment of a large lawn, but on a small plot they are well worthwhile. Vermiculite, also called Terralite, costs $2.10 for a big bag containing four cubic feet, with Perlite quite a bit higher—I don't have the price in front of me at the moment. The trick is to dump small piles of stuff here and there on the aerated lawn and work it into the holes with an old broom.

On light, sandy soils, peat moss will confer an immediate and long-lasting benefit, for it holds water like a sponge against the deoughty periods of midsummer and encourages good root action in the grasses. Buy it by the bale, for it comes a lot cheaper that way, and if you have any left over after doing the lawn, it has a dozen and one other uses in the garden. If your sample is lumpy, rub it through a sieve to break it up so it can be swept into the holes in the sod.

on heavy soil containing quite a bit of clay, it is pretty hard to beat a dressing of plain sand. It is important, though, to get a really coarse grade, for that very fine stuff sometimes sold for use in children's sand boxes will combine with the clay to form a concrete-like texture. If your coarse sand happens to have a lot of small stones in it, so much the better, for grass has a definite affinity for stones—you must have noticed how difficult it is to keep grass from invading a gravel-driveway.

Pebble-size stones and larger are hazardous, of course, when a rotary power mower is used—although by far the greatest number of mower accidents are caused by plastic toys left lying on the law—but any stones smaller than half an inch across can be swept into the holes along with the sand.

No Smiles Among Exiles

LIMA, Peru-You find exiles all over South America. Down here, politics is irreconcilable. When you lose an election, the general rule has been: blow the country before you land in jail or get shot. In Uruguay you find hordes of Argentine refugees. Bolivia once had thousands of Peruvian refugees and now Lima has thousands of Bolivian refugees who cannot return home, probably ever.

It's as if you lost an election in Rhode Island had to flee to Texas to live. The whole business of exile is so foreign to the nature of someone from an Anglo-Saxon country, where one is taught to get along with one's neighbors of different points of view, that I resolved to have a talk with an exile to find out how it felt.

He was a stender, brooding man with lustrous eyes, a Bolivian who would not allow his name to be used because there are still friends and relatives in Bolivia. (Bolivia is a place where they like to hang their politicians on lampposts and there have been times when every other lamp-post in La Paz had a politico dan-gling from it.)

gling from it.)

There are roughly 2,000 Bolivians living in Lima, my refugee estimated, and probably 18,000 Bolivians in exile in all, many of them in Argentina and Chile. The great tragedy of exile, my refugee said, is that it drains the country from which the exiles flee of some of its best citizens. My man is a professional man.

some of its best citzens. My man is a professional man.

Bolivia, of course, is in desperate financial straits and one of the principal factors hindering recovery is that so many of its best educated and best trained citizens have had to take to their heels. I asked him if he would return to Bolivia if there were a change in the political climate. He hesitated a long time, then sald:

"Probably I would return, if it's not too much longer. But the country has been destroyed to such an extent by the present regime, that the chances of finding work there are dwindling every day." Work is the key problem of all exiles and, while my exile is well connected and has two jobs, others were not so lucky. In most cases exiles have to step down when they fiee their country, to a lower standard of living, a cheapening of their talents. Being exiles, they have to sell their services (frequently of a very high order) at marked down prices and can't protect themselves.

Critic at Large

"You must understand that a great many South Americans are self-exiles. They didn't have to leave their native countries but, because of the situation in their countries, people exile themselves. Whole families exile themselves.

"Psychologically, it's pretty hard on all of us You feel terribly depressed

"Psychologically, it's pretty hard on all of us. You feel terribly depressed living in exile. You feel everyone is against you. There are terrible frustrations. Then there are the memories of home. You cannot uproot those. Man does not live by bread alone."

With the growing liberalization of Latin American politics the exile problem is diminishing slowly. Bad as it is in Bolivia, conditions are even worse in Paraguay and Bolivia is full of Paraguayan refugees — probably 50,000 of them.

Then they made up their minds whether to enroll in his correspondence school in English.

At least once every year for years it ran in newspapers and magazines unchanged, word for word as it always had been, with the same ple-hard for the same immortal opening question. It was something like the Statue of Liberty or Fourth of July oratory.

Old Ad Goes

And now it's no more. Sherwin Cody died a few years ago, and the present owners of the correspondence school have decided to abandon the famous old ad and strike out for new approaches. Whether that'll bring in new customers remains to be seen.

Why was the Sherwin Cody and so unbeatably good? Experts say it was because of its headline. If you ask a casual newspaper reader, "Do you make these mistakes in English?" the urge to read on and find out what the test questions are is irresistible. (All right, here's an example. One of Sherwin Cody's wrong sentences was "Between you and away.

It was invited as well as myself." Well, do you make the seen.

It that's so, why couldn't the ads go on forever? What happened in recent years that finally killed Madison Avenue's most immortal slogan? The answer. I think is this. Thirty, 40 years ago the world was still a simpler place, There were millions of people who never went to high school and yearned for better jobs. How could they switch from a blue-collar job? They might make it even with out a high school diploma, but they knew their poor English would always be a dead give-

When the better job called for writing a letter or making a sales talk to a customer, they'd perform those tasks like an educated person.

Now it's 1962 and the Sherwin Cody is gone forever.

Professionally, Christine couldn't be busier. Next assignment is Carl Foreman's The Victors, with Sophia Loren and Simone Signoret... Writer Freddie Finklehoffe told me that the reason his book about Judy Garland has been abandoned is because "she's so successful now, she doesn't need it." Actually the book was almost written but the exuberant Judy was not in the mood to rehash her past.

The same Eileen Herlie who does a seduction-dance in the Broadway due play, All American, is the Miss Herlie who played the mother of Laurence Olivier's Hamlet in the film version. Olivier, by the way, was 16 years older than his "mother."

Melina Mercouri files to New York to see Jules Dassin

and his new play. But she will not come to Hollywood to see the producers who want her for movies. It's been a long engagement with no word of divorce between Melina and her Greek husband.

Also in June Jack Lemmon will return to London to make his Dangerous Silence movie with Peter Sellers. The Sam Spiegel picture was abandoned late last fall because of script problems.

Max Von Sydow, who will play Christ when George Stevens makes The Greatest Story Ever Told, will come from Sweden for a few days in Hollywood to talk about his latest Ingmar Bergman film. Through a Glass Darkly, which has been nominated for an Oscar in the foreign film category. Von Sydow was very powerful in last year's winner, Bergman's The Virgin Spring.

Rosalind Russell, a different kind of mother in her new film Gypsy, was invied by Mamie Eisenhower to accompany her to Main Chance in Arizona. Roz. a long-time friend of Mamie's, had to decline: "I have about six more weeks in Gypsy, she told the former first lady.

Sheree North tried and tried to become a serious, dark-haired actress. So it is ironic she has to make it all over again as a bionde bombshell in I Can Get It for You Wholesale, which is on the road prior to its Breadway opening. I hear great things of Lillian Roth as the mother in Wholesale.

Talented Students Cover 13 Centuries in Minutes

By BERT BINNY

A rare parade of talent took to the stage at Oak Bay Junior High School last night for the annual talented students' recital sponsored by the Victoria Musical Art Society.

The first part of the program, with three scenes and a prologue, gave glimpses into the progress of music from the time of the Gregorian chant, Actually, what Colonel Glenn did for space, the students did for musical time; they covered some 13 centuries of it in a matter of minutes,

High-Rise Protest Considered

Victoria Chamber of Com victoria Chamber of Com-merce officials are considering whether a representation should be made in support of a petition against Oak Bay council's plan for high-rise apartment development on the fringe of Victoria University's Gordon Head campus.

Capt. Ron Newell, chairman of the chamber's university committee, said yesterday he will discuss the issue with the group's president.

Capt. Newell, a member of capt. Newes, a memory the university development board, supported Mayor R, B. Wilson's remarks that the board was forced by Oak Bay to reserve 40 acres at the edge of the campus for high-rise development.

"It rocked us back on our beels. It was quite a surprise when they made their de-mand," said Capt. Newell.
